Our Packing Sheds, Farm Buildings and Office.

OUR GUARANTY—SUBSTITUTIONS—We take a different position with respect to orders evidently intended for commercial orchard planting, and those evidently intended for home use only.

Orders for Commercial Orchard—In respect to such orders we guarantee our customers against wilful or intentional change of labels, and will exercise the greatest care to have every variety exactly what it purports to be. In case of any error we will replace with other stock or refund the purchase price as preferred. On such orders if you desire substitutions made in case we are out of a variety ordered, please state this wish when you place your order, otherwise we shall omit such varieties and refund the money for them.

Orders for Home Use—On these orders, showing from the number of each variety ordered that they cannot be intended for commercial orchard, we shall, if out of a variety ordered, send some other variety in its place, CORRECTLY LABELLED. We shall send a variety as nearly like the one ordered as we have, and no low priced variety will be sent for a higher priced one without refunding the difference in cost. This will be our general rule: now, if you desire no changes whatever in your order, state the fact and no changes will be made, and the money will be refunded for any varieties that we cannot furnish.

If your order is for fruit trees, we shall construe an order for ten or more trees of a variety as being intended for commercial planting, such as 10 McIntosh, but not 10 apple trees made up of several varieties. In small fruits, however, there may be room for doubt, and therefore we would much prefer that you indicate your wishes about each variety when ordering.

CASH WITH ORDER—We shall decline to fill orders not paid for before shipment. That we ask for cash is no reflection on the credit of our customers, but is an absolute necessity to success in a mail order business where thousands of orders are handled, the average amount of which is a very few dollars each. Neither do we ship C. O. D. This is both more expensive for the buyer, and makes more trouble in shipping when our whole force is very busy.

MANNER OF REMITTING—Any way most convenient to you—postal or express order, or your own personal check. Do not send cash in a letter without registering.

ORDER EARLY—remembering that instead of having fully three months in which to ship as in the spring, we are limited in the fall to about six weeks during which shipments may be made. Remember too, that October and Early November are the best times for fall planting

WHY PLANT IN THE FALL?

You will find fall planting of most trees, plants and shrubs very helpful for two particular reasons. It enables your planting to become thoroughly set in the ground and well established to begin growing at the very beginning of the following spring; and, since the early spring weather is apt to be cold, wet and disagreeable to us humans, though not so to trees and shrubs, it is a relief for most of us to know we were foresighted and got the planting all done during pleasant weather of the previous autumn.

Here in Western New York, I have planted in the first week in April trees which made as much growth their first Summer, as trees planted the fall before. But the trouble is, it is generally impossible to send trees to you as early as April first, and besides, unless you are in the tree business too, the spring season often comes with such surprising suddenness that you do not get around to thinking about your tree planting till it is too late to get them into the ground for the most important period of the season's growth—which is always the first month of the spring growing season.

After securing your attractive house, if the yard and surroundings are omitted from your plans the result will look incomplete. The practical use of fruit trees is too often overlooked when planning for trees and shrubs about the yard and garden.

McINTOSH—To my belief the highest quality apple

I do not intend this bulletin to be taken as a general catalogue, as I have omitted descriptions of varieties in all the fruits, and have not listed plants not advised for fall planting. For description of varieties see my general catalogue. If you have lost yours, I will be glad to send you another.

I ship two-year old trees as far as possible; but when sold out, or in varieties where I have as yet only one year old trees, orders will be filled with my best one year old stock.

Dwarf Early Harvest—First Crop

Your house and your yard depend on each other to become attractive. Make your planting permanent as far as possible—shrubs and trees which will grow and bloom year after year.

A Young Dwarf Bartlett and its First Crop.

Below are given the approximate dates on which the varieties of pears listed are mature at Geneva, N. Y. These should not be confused with picking dates, as most pears should be picked while still green and allowed to ripen to maturity in common storage, such as the house cellar. The weeks indicate the length of time these varieties will last in common storage after reaching maturity.

This table is taken from Bulletin No. 408, issued June, 1915, by the New York State Agricultural Experiment Station.

Dwarf Plum Tree in its Third Year

Don't dig the holes long before planting—the earth dries out. Trim just the ends of the roots. Plant Standard fruit trees so that when the ground settles the little crook just above the root will be an inch under ground. Dwarf fruit trees should have this crook an inch above ground. Other plants should be as they stood in the nursery.

Dwarf cherries most naturally grow in the bush form. The sweet varieties are the stronger growers, while the sours are very much inclined to begin fruiting almost right away. Some of these sours I find fruiting the first year, and in a year or two at least they will begin giving you crops of fruit quite sufficient to interest the small boys. Both the sweet and sour cherries are wonderfully beautiful and ornamental in the spring-blooming period—fully as attractive as many of your spring-blooming ornamental shrubs. Nature has here done her best to produce trees both ornamental and useful.

This is for the man with an appetite for cherry pie. These six trees may be grown on a piece of ground varying from 12 x 18 feet, to 20 x 30 feet, according to the severity of pruning.

Bourgeat	Orange
Champion	Sweet Winter, 50c
Rea's Mammoth

All Quince trees are dwarf in habit of growth—really little bushes, and are usually grown in bush or vase form. They fruit from wood growing the same year. They bear very early, the Champion especially frequently bearing in the nursery row. This variety is almost certain to bear a year from planting. For commercial planting set 10 to 12 feet apart, and for garden vase form 6 x 6 feet, with of course, closer pruning.

Young Royal Duke in Bloom.

Fall planting is safely done as late as the ground remains unfrozen. The trees you plant this fall should not be pruned till spring, except for the root trimming when planted. For winter protection mound earth up about the stem of newly planted trees, for 8 to 12 inches, and scrape it down level next spring.

For your convenience I have given after each variety its usual date of ripening here at Geneva. In selecting kinds of peaches for home use the season of ripening is often important. With this data you can choose kinds which ripen in succession, instead of together, and avoid the sorts which would ripen during the time of the annual vacation. Peach trees planted this fall should be protected for the winter in a mound of earth a foot high as soon as planted. At the first sign of spring this protecting mound should be removed.

My Farm Gang Picking a Crop of Bartlett Pears

Standard Fruit Trees

Pears like best a strong soil, which of course should have good drainage. A loam topsoil with a clay subsoil is ideal for most varieties. In commercial orchards plant 16 to 18 feet apart, though in the home garden closer planting is allowable. If you are planting commercially, an easy market is everywhere found for Bartlett and Seckel. A tree of Kieffer in the home orchard will give you an excellent cooking or canning pear, but if grown commercially plant so you can ship it in car load lots. Clapp's Favorite is very early and perishable, so should also be shipped in car lots. Lawrence, Worden-Seckel and Vermont Beauty, are excellent home varieties, but are low priced in the commercial market. Sheldon you will find one of the highest quality sorts for the garden, and more popular than formerly in the market: it is also one of the better keepers. Comice and Bosc are in a class by themselves: both are of very high quality as garden varieties, and bring the highest prices in the market. Bosc will not bear much under 8 or 10 years but it is a good investment. I am planting it commercially myself. (C. C. M.)
